

but we can't fix the street until the sewer's repaired. But we have a real good city council and I think things are going to work out well," he said.

Harris has been in Moulton 33 years now and has no plans of ever leaving.

"We want this to be a town where people can enjoy living in safety. I think the positives outnumber the negatives. We've got work to do, but it will get done somehow," he said.
